

The Chronicle of Philanthropy

January 10, 2008 Thursday

People: Managing (excerpt)

AIDS Foundation of Chicago: Appointed Johnathon E. Briggs, an urban-affairs reporter at the Chicago Tribune, to be director of communications, and Loren Leidinger-Avila, field coordinator at CARE, based in Houston, to be director of development.

Alzheimer's Foundation of America (New York): Appointed Susan Peschin, a management consultant at Discover Inspiration (Rockville, Md.), to be director of public policy.

American Council of Young Political Leaders (Washington): Appointed Linda Rotunno, director of development at the Center for American Progress (Washington), to be chief executive officer.

Arizona Friends of Foster Children Foundation (Phoenix): Appointed Raoul E. Sada, president and chief executive officer of Volunteers for Hospice (Sun City, Ariz.), to be executive director. He succeeds Jan Chisum, who has retired.

Association of Fundraising Professionals (Arlington, Va.): Announced the death of William R. Simms, a co-founder and former director of development at the National Urban League (New York), on December 7. He was 94.

Attitudes & Attire (Dallas): Appointed Cameron Hernholm, head of development at Hillels of Georgia (Atlanta), to be development director. This organization helps women become self-sufficient.

Beech Acres Parenting Center (Cincinnati): Appointed Jay G. Fridy, director of regional development at the U. of Cincinnati Foundation, to be vice president of development.

Big Brothers Big Sisters of New York City: Appointed Michael A. Corriero, a judge at the New York State Court of Claims, based in New York, to be executive director, effective July 1. He will succeed Allan Luks, who plans to retire.

Boca Raton Community Hospital Foundation (Fla.): Appointed Claudia Brooks Welsh, executive director of the American Committee for the Weizmann Institute of Science (Hollywood, Fla.), to be vice president and senior director of capital campaign.

Boy Scouts of America National Foundation (Irving, Tex.): Appointed Colin V. French, interim executive director and former senior endowment counsel, to be executive director.